England and France

Fighting and fighting at random ever since those two were born. They beat the crap of each other during the 100 years war for more than 100 years, and whenever there was a fight going on, they always joined opposite camps so that they could fight again. Napoleons wars ended up as "let's make England an outsider" campaign, and all in all those two countries would do anything to oppose each other.

These days, England and France cooperate on military and economic projects... or so it seems, but France likes to take the stand "I'm friends with Germany!". And England is England, and handles EU crisis with "What do I care?" and looking the other way, so those two have after all a very spicy relationship.
